How to transfer apps from android to android via nfc. How to use nfc android. How to use nfc app. What is nfc app on android.

While Android Pay might be the first thing that people think of when they talk about NFC apps, there's more to it than just mobile payments. A clever user can use NFC tags to automate a whole host of phone functions, such as passing contacts, silencing your phone, launching apps, or configuring your wireless settings. Check out these nine clever NFC apps for Android phones. First things first, though: Android Pay is Google's NFC-powered tap-to-pay payment system available to Android users on non-rooted Android 4.4 phones or later. Android Pay combines the ease of use with security, sparing you from fumbling around with cards or PINs while ensuring transaction security for your credit cards through a virtual account number. Even better, you still retain your card reward points. Trigger, formerly known as NFC Task Launcher, is a powerful Android automation app that allows you to automate numerous tasks and scripts for your smartphone based on a variety of triggers, such as NFC tags. Creative users can program a wide variety of tasks to be triggered with an NFC tag, such as silencing your phone when you tap an NFC tag on your nightstand, or turning on your Wi-Fi and killing your mobile data when you tap a tag at your doorway, or automatically connecting to your car's Bluetooth. Tasker ($2.99) + Locale NFC Plugin ($1.53) Tasker is another well-regarded Android automation tool. With the addition of plugins, such as the Locale NFC Plugin, users can use NFC tags as triggers to initiate Tasker tasks. As with Trigger, user creativity is the main limit to what you can do, as you can configure a wide variety of tasks that you can trigger with different NFC tags. DIMPLE.IO ($24.99/NFC sticker, Free App) DIMPLE.IO uses programmable NFC stickers that you can attach to your phone to effectively give you 4 programmable buttons stuck right onto your mobile device. Simply attach the DIMPLE.IO tags near your phone's NFC radio, and you can then use the app to program the buttons to do everything from calling emergency numbers, launching app shortcuts, triggering hardware settings, and more. The stickers are a bit pricey, with single stickers with four programmable buttons setting you back $24.99 or $14.99 for half-size tags with two buttons. Hitting the snooze button on an alarm clock app is too easy. In order for Puzzle Alarm Clock to stop beeping, users need to solve a puzzle, or physically get up to an NFC tag or QR code. The app comes with a variety of random puzzles and the option to automatically open an app right after the alarm. To get even more of a start on the day, try placing the NFC tag right next to your washroom sink so you can get straight to freshening up in the morning. Sleep As Android For something a bit more full featured, check out Sleep As Android, an excellent sleep cycle tracker and alarm that uses your on-board sensors to track your sleep and help you wake up at just the right time. Like Puzzle Alarm Clock, users can set Sleep As Android's alarm clock to shut off only when tapped against an NFC tag, but the app also comes with a wealth of extras like sleep tracking and noise/snoring logging, Android Wear integration, and more. InstaWiFi Sharing your Wi-Fi password with visiting friends can be a bit of a chore, especially if you're a fan of cryptographically strong passwords loaded with symbols, numbers and alternating cases. Enter InstaWiFi, an app that allows users to share Wi-Fi network login details through an NFC tag or QR code. Afterward, users can simply tap their phone against the NFC tag or scan the QR code to connect to the network. NFC Tools is a combination NFC tag reader and writer, allowing you to read technical details and information stored in the tag, as well as write information into non-write-protected tags. Users can save text, links, details, GPS locations, addresses, configured Bluetooth connections and more. The addition of companion app NFC Tasks allows users to create automated task scripts that can range from enabling or disabling network settings and alarms, launching Tasker tasks, configuring wireless networks and more. NFC ReTag Pro ($1.99) NFC ReTag Pro allows users to reuse write-protected NFC tags (such as old elevator tags, badges, keycards, pricetags) by storing the tag's device ID and using that as a trigger for a variety of tasks. NFC ReTag Pro comes with a variety of actions that you can trigger with a tag, such as phone settings (volume, brightness, auto-sync), network controls and an app or Tasker task launcher, among other uses. A neat feature with NFC ReTag Pro is how it lets you program in tag cycles, with different tasks for each scan. Wear, formerly Android Wear, is Google's smartwatch platform that powers watches from dozens of manufacturers. Some smartwatch manufacturers include great functionality right out of the box with their default apps, but you can turn a budget-priced, bare-bones smartwatch into a powerhouse with the right smartwatch apps. Google's pared-down version of Google Play is available right on your wrist, which makes it easy to discover new smartwatch apps for your Wear device. In the Wear version of Google Play, you'll find a list of popular apps, a few handy categories, and even a list of apps on your phone that have smartwatch versions available. Since it can be tough to sift through the thousands of smartwatch app options on such a tiny screen, we assembled the 15 best Wear apps to help increase your productivity, access important information, and stay entertained when you're away from your phone. The apps in this list are available for free from Google Play. Some of them have a premium version that you can buy, and others have optional in-app purchases. Still, you can use the basic version of each app without paying anything. ParKing is a handy app that takes the hassle out of remembering where you parked your car. When you launch the app on your smartwatch, all you do is tap the little car icon to log where you parked. When it comes time to find your car, you'll be able to zoom in on a Google Maps view of its exact location. Google Keep, which shows up on your Wear smartwatch as Keep Notes, is a lightweight note-taking app that's available on a variety of devices and via a web interface. The version of Google Keep for your smartwatch lets you access your notes on the go and jot down notes wherever you are. Notes created on your watch are synced to the cloud, so you can access them from your other devices later. The AccuWeather app brings the same forecasts you can access on the web or your phone to your Wear smartwatch. You don't get the MinuteCast information, radar, or other bells and whistles because the information is pared down for the limited screen size on smartwatches. What you do get is a weather app that's easy to read at a glance. Wear Casts is a standalone Wear app, meaning it works independently from your phone (except for getting podcasts to the watch). You can use Wear Casts to download podcasts to your watch, pair Bluetooth earbuds, and listen to podcasts whenever you want, even if your phone isn't within Bluetooth range. Since Wear Casts doesn't require a constant Bluetooth connection to your phone, it's easier on your batteries than other apps. Amazon has an official Alexa app for Android phones, but it isn't compatible with Wear. That's where the third-party app Listens for Alexa comes in. This app brings Alexa to your wrist, and it includes most of the functionality of an actual Alexa device. You can even use this app to control any smart home devices that you usually control with your Echo. Bring! is a shopping list app that lets you create, edit, and share lists right from your smartwatch. It includes a library of items with easy-to-understand icons, and you can add items to the list using your smartwatch's voice transcription functionality. Citymapper is a must-have if you use public transit in one of the cities it covers or you're planning to visit a supported city. It brings a ton of information about bus, train, subway, ferry, and taxi data right to your wrist. The downside is that it's only available in a limited number of cities, and it's useless if you don't live in any of them and don't plan on visiting. One major function that Wear smartwatches lack when compared to dedicated fitness devices like Fitbit is sleep tracking. There's also a lack of sleep tracking apps on Google Play that work with Wear but Sleep As Android fits the bill nicely. Sleep As Android includes a ton of features, some of which aren't available from dedicated fitness devices. For example, the lucid dreaming mode can determine when you enter rapid eye movement (REM) sleep, and it provides an auditory cue to help you realize you're asleep without fully waking up. The only downside to Sleep As Android is that the smartwatch app doesn't work independently from your phone. So you have to make sure your phone is charged up, paired to your watch, and nearby when you go to sleep. Use the Apps on Your Phone section in the Google Play store on your watch to download this. If you use the Google Authenticator app on your phone, this app is a great accessory to add to your arsenal. It provides easy access to your authenticators via a swiping motion, and the numbers are large enough that they're easy to read even on small smartwatch screens. The only downside is that it relies on your phone to work, so it can't act as a backup for the authenticator on your phone. If you're a whiz at mental math, having a calculator on your wrist might not have that much appeal. For the rest of us, Google's basic calculator app is an awesome answer to the clunky calculator watches of the 1980s, and it takes the headache out of calculating tips. Many free and paid apps provide access to new watch faces, but Mr. Time is at the top of the heap. It includes free watch faces, premium watch faces you can buy, and you can design your own. Hole19 is a golf range finding and score tracking app that runs on your phone. Plus, it has an accessory smartwatch app that lets you access essential information from the convenience of your wrist. If your local course is included in the more than 40,000 courses that Hole19 covers, you can use both the smartphone and smartwatch app for free. There is a paid version, but it primarily provides high-resolution graphics rather than unlocking additional course information. Despite the minimal screen space available on Wear smartwatches, some decent games are available for the platform. Infinity Loop is especially well suited to play on small screens. This puzzle game uses the basic mechanic of tapping puzzle pieces to rotate them until they form a pattern. It's easy to pick up, and it's basic compared to the great smartphone games out there, but it is a nice little time-waster that you can play without pulling out your phone. There are many benefits associated with staying adequately hydrated. Still, most people have trouble remembering to take a few sips here and there throughout the day. Water Drink Reminder is designed to remind you to drink at regular intervals so that you take in an optimal amount of water, based on your height and weight. It runs on both your phone and smartwatch, so there's less of a chance of missing a reminder. Google's map app is an easy sell on Wear. It's simplistic compared to the full smartphone app. However, it makes it easy to orient yourself and find local points of interest when you're walking around on foot. It also allows you to drop a pin at your destination and launch full navigation on your phone. Thanks for letting us know! Get the Latest Tech News Delivered Every Day Subscribe Tell us why!
